

When Mental Illness Strikes

ANOTHER KIND OF MIRACLE

For many families who have experienced the suffering of mental illness, faith has not brought a cure, but it has brought another kind of miracle. It is the miracle or serenity in the midst of tragedy, of courageous coping and compassionate caring. It was not a sudden miracle, but one that occurred in God's own time.

A PRAYER

"Oh God, Who cares about all Your children, grant us the gift of acceptance that we might find serenity and courage this day to cope with the mental illness in our family. Teach us the patience and understanding needed by our loved one(s) who is mentally ill. Help us not to be stigmatized by the attitudes of the uninformed and uncaring. Strengthen us with the gratitude for the love and understanding we receive from You and those who care. Enable us, with wisdom and guidance, to undertake Your will in our family life and to serve those who suffer: Amen."

Text by John Baggett. M.Div., M.A., whose son has the mental illness of schizophrenia.

SUGGESTED READING

Andreasen, N. - THE BROKEN BRAIN: THE BIOLOGICAL REVOLUTION IN THE PSYCHIATRY, (1984), Harper and Row

Ciarrochi, J.W. - HANDBOOK OF MENTAL DISORDERS, (1993),) Paulist Press

Hatfield, A. & Lefley, H. - SURVIVING MENTAL ILLNESS: STRESS, COPING AND ADAPTATION, (1993), Guilford Press

Koplewicz, H. - IT'S NOBODY'S FAULT: NEW HOPE FOR DIFFICULT CHILDREN AND THEIR FAMILIES, (1996), Random House/Time Warner

Papolos, D. & Papolos, J. - OVERCOMING DEPRESSION, (1992), Harper Perennial

Ross, J. - TRIUMPH OVER FEAR: A BOOK OF HELP AND HOPE FOR PEOPLE WITH ANXIETY, PANIC ATTACKS AND PHOBIAS, Bantam Books

Shifrin, J. - PATHWAYS TO PARTNERSHIP: AN AWARENESS & RESOURCE GUIDE ON MENTAL ILLNESS FOR CONGREGATIONS, 1997 Pathways to Promise

Shifrin, J. (ed.) - Mental Illness Awareness Booklets: WORSHIP RESOURCES, THE BIBLE AS A RESOURCE and CREATING CARING CONGREGATIONS, (1997), Pathways to Promise

Torrey, E. F. - SURVIVING SCHIZOPHRENIA: A FAMILY MANUAL, (1995), Harper & Row

Woolis, R. - WHEN SOMEONE YOU LOVE HAS A MENTAL ILLNESS, (1992), G. P. Putnam & Sons

PATHWAYS TO PROMISE
5400 Arsenal Street
St. Louis, Missouri 63139
Tel. (314) 644-8400

MANITOBA SCHIZOPHRENIA SOCIETY
A REASON TO HOPE THE MEANS TO COPE

Manitoba Schizophrenia Society, Inc.

100-4 Fort Street, Winnipeg, MB R3C 1C4

Tel: (204) 786-1616 • Fax: (204) 783-4898

E-mail address: info@mss.mb.ca

Website: www.mss.mb.ca

In a Family of Faith

WHEN MENTAL ILLNESS STRIKES

When mental illness strikes a family, it's like being struck by lightning - it's both unexpected and devastating. In fact, the experience is not all that unlike a death in the family as they must cope with and adapt to a terrible loss.

However, unlike a death, society's view of mental illness often can seem similar to the experience of some terrible humiliating event which brings shame to all family members. It is a tragedy and like all tragedies it raises profound human questions for those who are impacted by it. For a religiously committed family it may, as other tragedies often do, initiate a crisis of faith.

THE EXPERIENCE OF SUFFERING

There is a profound suffering in mental illness and when the illness carries with it a diagnosis such as depression, Bipolar disorder and/or schizophrenia, the experience of loss is substantial.

The onset of these illnesses occurs frequently in late adolescence or early adulthood. There is a major change in personality, in ability to function socially and to cope with every day problems. The person is frequently tortured by disturbing thoughts and feelings that cannot be escaped. For the family, it often seems that the person they once knew and loved, and for whom they had so many dreams, no longer exists. In that familiar person's place is a stranger whose behavior is incomprehensible and unbearable. As time goes on, unlike other tragedies, this one seems unending. The family lives in constant anxiety, often moving from crisis to crisis without respite.

THE POWER OF FAITH FOR COPING

Many families with relatives who are mentally ill have found that their spiritual faith has been challenged. Often they show remarkable evidence, in their personal courageous journeys, of the power of spiritual belief to help them cope with serious mental illness. While their individual journeys are unique and their religious traditions varied, there are still many discernable common elements to their experiences.

Many spiritually committed families have grown from a faith that pleaded with God to entirely remove the tragedy to one that asked God for the serenity, courage and wisdom to help cope with the tragedy. It is natural to hope for a miracle that will restore things to the way they once were before the illness struck. However, most families have discovered that the miracle they have been given is the ability to withstand more emotional pain than they ever would have thought possible; to feel more peace in the midst of daily turmoil than was often felt in more tranquil times; and, a sense of being led by a wisdom greater than their own as they wind their way through the maze of decisions that confront families who care for a person who is mentally ill.

A PREOCCUPATION WITH RESPONSIBILITY

Spiritually committed families grow from a faith that was preoccupied with a responsibility to one focused on acceptance. When something terrible happens, it is normal to seek a source to blame. Most families go through periods of blaming the mentally ill person for becoming ill and not getting better; the friends of the ill relative for being a bad influence or for abandoning the person; the mental health professionals for not having a cure or giving helpful advice. Most of all, family members blame themselves for "causing" the problem or not being able to "fix it". It is not unusual for them to go through intensive self-searching in an attempt to discover the "mistakes" or "sins" for which they feel they are being punished.

The preoccupation with responsibility frequently goes further, taking the form of an obsessive concern about "doing the right thing" in relation to the care and treatment of the mentally ill person. The caretaking family will agonize over every decision. They burden themselves with guilt each time things do not turn out as hoped.

A PAINFUL TIME OF CHANGE

In such circumstances, it is normal to "become angry with God". Like all tragedies, that seem senseless and unfair, mental illness can shake one's confidence in the Lord. Such times are deeply unhappy. All the old securities and certainties of belief are severely shaken. Thankfully, for most spiritually committed families who struggle with the problem of serious mental illness, this time of doubt is not the final stage of the journey. Such times, as agonizing as they are, are often a time of preparation for a more mature and meaningful relationship with God.

ACCEPTANCE IS THE KEY

Serious mental illnesses are not anyone's fault. The issue for faith is not looking for someone to blame, rather it is how to cope with and adapt to the tragic reality. Acceptance is the key!

As long as family members seek to escape their suffering through denial, frantic searches for "magical cures" or blame, they condemn themselves and usually the mentally ill person as well, to additional needless misery. Acceptance is not easy - in some cases, it may not even be humanly possible.

For the spiritually committed family, acceptance is a gift from God. Acceptance means the ability to face the reality of the illness; learn about it; learn about treatment options; live with compassion toward the person who is mentally ill; and, the patience and forgiveness toward those who do not understand. Acceptance means having the courage to no longer be ashamed of the illness and a willingness to teach others that they should be more understanding and compassionate. Acceptance means "getting on with one's own life" and not allowing the tragedy to totally consume all the energies and resources of the family. It means not constantly neglecting the needs of other family members who are not ill. Most of all, it means accepting God's will. It means trusting that one's own imperfect efforts are acceptable and that the suffering itself is meaningful.

When acceptance finally takes place, it is experienced as a restoration of a fellowship with God that seemed broken by the tragedy. God is experienced as being near instead of absent; as a friend rather than an enemy; and, as a daily guide rather than an enigma.

Individuals who began being so burdened by their own family problem that they had no time or energy for anything else, turn outward. They come to the realization that they can improve God's Kingdom on earth by working to improve the quality of life for those with mental illness.